TO THE EDITOR of the SYDNEY MORNING HERALD.—Sir.—As it is pessible that the unaccountable omission of my name from the list of "Legally Qualified Medical Fractitioners" of New South Wales, as published in the columns of your paper of the 21st instant, may not be supplied before the end of this quarter, or even before the ensuing year, and as I do not wish to remain all this time under the imputation of empiriciam, my I request your permission to state, that I submitted, in 1844, to the them Medical Board, a Diploma of the Royal College of Physicians of Edinburgh, a Diploma of the Royal College of Surgeons, London; together with a degree in midwifery. It is not likely I would have been attached in "general order" to the 99th Regiment in 1844, to proceed to New Zealand in medical charge; nor is it at all likely that on my return I would have been appointed Colonial Medical Officer, attached to the "General Hoppital," Sydney, from that period until its dissolution in 1848, unless I were both legally and duly qualified. I beg to say that I have written to the Medical Board on the subject, in hopes they will take the carliest opportunity of rectifying the mistake.

The Medical Bill, as amended in select committee was read a second time, and will be committed this

The other business on the paper was postponed.

THE Legislative Assembly met yesterday, pursuant to adjournment, at twenty-eight minutes past elever a.m., when Mr. Forsten moved that the House pro a.m., when Mr. Forster moved that the House pro-ceed to Government House to present the Speaker to his Excellency the Governor-General. The motion having been put from the chair and carried, hon. members immediately left the Chamber.

After the lapse of about twenty-five minutes members again assembled.

The SPEAKER said that, accompanied by hon. members, he had attended at Government House, and presented himself to his Excellency as the Speaker elected in the exercise of the undoubted right of the House. His Excellency had been pleased to express his approval of the choice made by the Assembly to express his approval of the choice made by the Assembly.

The House then adjourned till three o'clock.

The Speaker again took the chair at twenty-five minutes past three o'clock.

Several petitions were presented by hon. members.

In answer to a question from Mr. Lavcock, the Secretarax ron Lanss said, it was the intention of the Government to form a general cemetery more remote from Sydney than the present. Botany Bay and the Parramatta Domain had been examined for the purpose, but no spot had been finally fixed upon. In answer to the same member, the Colonial Secretary for Public Works would cease to hold a seat in the Legislative Council.

In answer to Mr. Paures, the same Minister said, the Government were proceeding with the revision

In answer to Mr. PARKES, the same Minister said, the Government were proceeding with the revision of the Commission of the Peace, and a new Commission would be issued as soon as practicable.

In answer to Mr. MORKES, the SECRETARY FOR LANDS said it was the intention of the Government to sue all persons who had not paid their assessment of stock under the Act 22-Vic. 17.

Some new motices of motion were given by hon. members.

Mr. JONES moved that the thanks of the House be given to Sir Daniel Cooper for his asprice in the chair.

members.

Mr. Jones moved that the thanks of the House be given to Sir Daniel Cooper for his service in the chair. Their late Speaker, it would be admitted by all, had laid them under peculiar obligations by the ability and uprightness with which he performed his duties. He was elected at a time when party feeling ran high, and by a bare majority of one. He had had no previous training to fit him for the discharge of his important duties. Under these disadvantages he applied himself diligently to the acquisition of Parliamentary knowledge, which he brought to bear on their proceedings with a clear and discriminating judgment. He had succeeded in satisfying every member of the House, and he (Mr. Jones) felt that this expression of their gratitude and esteem was only a just tribute to his excellent conduct.

Mr. Hav seconded the motion, which was passed unanimously.

On the motion of Mr. Samuel, the House then went into Committee of Supply.

Mr. Samuel then moved that £92,000 be voted to defray the expenses of the public services for the means of Parliaments.

Mr. Black moved that the sum of $3375 be granted for various services on the Supplementary Estimates for 1859 under the head of "Works and Buildings." Considerable discussion ensued on an item of £2063 to meet contracts already entered into for the defences of the harbour. Mr. Hav and others described it as voting money for a service when it was too late for the House to give its sanction, and condemned, in severe terms, the practice of unauthorised expenditures. Eventually the sum of £3275 was voted, being £100 less than the original amount.

of unauthorised expenditures. Eventually the sum of £3275 was voted, being £100 less than the original amount.

Mr. Black then moved that £20,279 be veted for the erection of a bridge to connect the Glebe Island abattoirs with Pyrmont. The vote was strongly opposed by Mr. Warkes, Mr. Dickson, Mr. Harr, and Mr. Aunold, and supported by Mr. Isvino, Ms. Parkes, and Mr. Markes, Mr. Dickson, Mr. Harr, and Mr. Aunold, and supported by Mr. Isvino, Ms. Parkes, and Mr. Markes, Co. Strikes, the sum was woted by 23 to 16.

The consideration of the proposed pension to Colonel Barmey was then resumed, and opposed by Mr. Dickson, Mr. Aunold, and other members. While replying to some observations of Mr. Oxley, Mr. Annold characterised that gentlemen as a "nominee of the Mesers. Macarthurs," whereupon the words weretaken down and reported, with other offensive expressions to the House. An entangled question of order arose, which occupied the attention of the House for upwards of three hours, and ended, as such questions usually end, with the words being withdrawn in deference to the ruling of the Speaker.

After which, the House again went into Committee of Supply. The proposed pension was at length voted by 20 to 9.

The Chainan reported progress and obtained leave to at again to-day.

The House adjourned at midnight till three o'clock this afternoon.

THE late accidents by which several valuable lives were lost demands something more than a pass ing notice. We owe regrets for the dead who ing notice. We owe regrets for the dead who in the midst of the enjoyment of social life in its sweetest forms, have been suddenly cut off; sympathy with the survivors to whom the dreary events of that fatal day will be recalled here-after, amidst the festivities of the colonial com-

In the observations we have to make we impute no other blame than that which is consistent with the respect due to the sacredness of sorrow. Who among us has not in some caucless hour jeopardised our own and others lives? Who can look back and not feel that an invisible hand must have averted impending danger. It would be presumptuous to forget that the inadvertence which too often has a fatal issue, at various times is the fault of all. Still while giving our tears to the dead, and our commiseration to the bereaved, it will be a public advantage to irrpress, especially upon young persons, the circumstances of these lamentable

It was shown in the evidence that none of the Treeves had any knowledge of boating, and that the rudder was confided to the ladies of the party, probably, as skilful as their com-panions. Nevertheless, any one acquainted with harbour navigation must be aware that it is easier to steer a ship than a sailing boat. The sudden gusts that come from the narrow points of land and catch the sail, require that the sheet should be under hand and free from all entanglement. We remember that some years ago a boat was upset in consequence of the sheet being given to an elderly lady, who, wisting it around her wrist, could not disengage it before the boat swamped. Were the journals of this colony to be closely examined, it would be found that almost since the foun-dation of the colony there has been an annua sacrifice of life from similar mismanagement. The upsetting of small boats under such circumstances s as certain as the laws of gravitation. same unconsciousness of danger; the same want of presence of mind when it occurs, will be seen in innumerable cases. There have, however, been many lives lost where parties in however, been many lives lost where parties in charge of the boat have had all the experience of seamanship. Their vigilance has been for a moment suspended, and a sudden gust has driven them under water. Accidents almost as numerous and as fatal have occurred in the harbour of Hobart Town, which is subject to the same conditions. The lofty Mount Wellington, the base of which is washed by the Derwent—the numerous lesser, resuntains the Derwent—the numerous lesser mountains and hills by which the harbour is surrounded, and the frequent turns and windings of the rivers have created similar perils from liability to sudden squalls. In the obituary of Tasmania will be found a long list of most precious lives which have been sacrificed by oversets from the want of nautical experience or lack of vigilance—both quality fatal.

Another of those causes to which life is a con-

Another of those causes to which life is a continual sacrifice in the colonies, and which has been very prominent lately, is the fording of rivers after a fall of rain. No doubt that few only perish among hundreds who escape unscathed. Still it is lamentable to read accounts almost weekly of the loss of most valuable lives from the want of that caution which so many accidents would suggest. Several years ago it was calculated that 500 persons had perished in crossing a single ford in Van Diemen's Land. Whenever from any considerable fall of rain the flow of the current is increased, life is almost certain to be lost. If people would only take into account lost. If people would only take into account the simplest laws of nature they would see how impossible it is for them to escape under such conditions. Every one knows that if a thousand pounds be in one scale and a thousand pounds and an ounce in another, that the single ounce will determine the preparations. ounce will determine the preponderance and send the weight so closely approximating up into the air. It might be equally obvious that if a current acquires but the slightest excess of force above the strength of man or horse, even that slight addition will be as fatal to life as it they had to contend with a cataract. The current which rolls along, and which the courageou man thinks he can brave, and often doe brave with success, because he possesses superiority of strength, may by the fall of showers so gather force as to "carry him away." Even those who are not very close observers must yet have remarked the force of water in descending a declivity—first hardly sufficient to lift a straw, it finally carries away the heavies substances, bearing along even large masses by like sand.

These are facts as much under the control of calculation as any other phenomens, and it is from oblivion of them that so many inestimable lives have been lost. It is only a few weeks ago since the eldest son of an eminent Tasmanian legislator lost his life in crossing a ford which he had traversed times innumerable with mpunity. It is only a few days ago that we had to record some similar examples in this colony These are points which though likely to escape the recollection, must be certainly obvious at moment's reflection.

The deplorable calamity which overtook the TRENVE family on the 26th of January is not more distressing than that which occurred the same day when Mr. HORNER and his son perished. The lives of these gentlemen were serrified by their advantaging. son perished. The lives of these gentlemen were sacrificed by their adventuring—that of the father in the attempt to rescue the son—where a perception of danger could hardly have failed them, had they taken time for could sideratiment of recoding wave to master the strongest was the cause of the catastrophe. One of the witnesses said "it was madness to bathe at such a dangerous place." What is madness beyond the subjection of reason to an impulse? The lashing and foaming of the surge is attractive to some men. of the surge is attractive to some men and they may enjoy its fury withou danger wherever the weight of water is insufficient to carry them off their feet; but it is absolutely necessary to remember this limit to safety, or a natural law, as inexorable as death, will reveal itself in the helpless struggles of the victim and the unavailing agony method of defending Port Jackson has been followed by a corresponding report from Cap-tain SEVECUE, of the Pelorus, on the defences of Port Phillip. This report is not intended to overturn the previous recommendations of the Defence Commission, the greater portion of which it approves, therein dealing with it more mergifully than Commodore Lourno's report did with the outlay that has already been incurred in Sydney harbour. It should be ob-served that both these officers, who have been invited to criticise the colonially-designed plans of defence, were engaged in naval operations in the late Russian war, and therefore bring to bear upon the subject the latest experiences of actual conflict. And, bearing that in mind, it is worth noticing that both of them lay more stress on providing effective means for preventing the enemy from ever getting into our ports, than providing means for fighting him when he is in. This is rather a reversal of the ideas that were in vogue a few years ago, when both in Sydney and in Melbourne it was thought best not to attempt to fortify the Heads, on account of their distance from the city, the expense of maintaining there a permanent and adequate force, and the risk that would be run in case a hostile fleet should force the passage. For these reasonable was thought better to concentrate the defence in the neighbourhood of the cities that would be the real object of attack. But now, nous arons changé tout cela.

In case of war and an anticipated attack, In case of war and an anticipated attack, Captain Setmour recommends that the citizens should avail themselves promptly of the natural defence they possess in the intricacy of the channel up their harbour, by at once taking up all the buoys that mark the South Channel. As this is the only passage for large ships, nothing larger than a steam corvette could get up to Hobson's Bay; and, to prevent even this, he recommends that vessels laden with atone should be stationed ready to be sunk at the north-east ends of the Western and Symond's Channels. This would completely block up all access to Williamstown, even if the Heads had been passed. To prevent this latter Heads had been passed. To prevent this latter result, and to keep hostile ships altogether out-side, he proposes some additional armament on a knoll near Shortland's Bluff, so as to rake the cntrance; and also that the colony should provide itself with a force of gunboats. This latter is the special feature of Captain SEYMOUR'S recommendation, and the one which involves the greatest outlay, and will probably give rise to the greatest discussion. The Defence Com-missioners had proposed a steam blockship. Captain Sermour says that the Home Government will not spare one; and that, as a force affoat is necessary to co operate with the shore batteries, in order to make the defence batteries, in order to make the defence effective, gunboats are the best things to be had. One of the modern floating batteries, he admits, would be efficacious if it were possible to have one, but then one could not be built in to have one, but then one could not be built in Melbourne except at enormous cost, and it would be almost impossible to bring one of them out from England. He had the pleasure, or the misfortune—whichever it may have been—to command one of these iron porpoises in the Crimean expedition, and he speaks from experience of and he speaks from experience of their abominable unwieldiness. In a heavy, or even in a moderate sea, they are utterly help-less; and setting sail on them has not the smallest effect in inducing any steadiness or sobriety of conduct. It would be running too great a risk, therefore, to trust one of them for the voyage by itself, and towing is out of the question over such an expanse of ocean, and where gales are so frequent. If, however, a floating battery would really be the best sort of defence, it would re-really be the best sort of defence, it would remain to be determined whether it would not be possible to send one out in pieces, and have it put together in Port Phillip.

All things considered, Captain Seymour gives the preference to gunboats, which undoubtedly can be most easily obtained, and most easily handled. Of this sort of craft there are four classes in her MAJESTY's Navy, the largest of which would be most suited for use in Port Phillip. These measure three hundred tons, are driven by eighty-horse power engines, draw eight feet of water, and mount four guns, viz., two sixty-eight pounders of four guns, viz., two sixty-eight pounders of ninety-five hundred weight, and two twelve-pounder howitzers. He suggests that there should be not less than twelve of these, and they would cost, exclusive of ordnance and stores, which would probably be supplied gratuitously from her MAJESTY'S dockyard, £92,400. This is a large sum of money, as it £92,400. This is a large sum of money, as it is exclusive of the cost of manning and maintainance; but Captain Seymour defends the demand on two grounds, first as having respect to the magnitude of the interests requiring defence, and secondly because the plan of defence ought to be adequate without countnot to be adequate without counting on the assistance of any ships of the Royal Navy. He intimates plainly that in case of a war, the ships on this station would not be found in colonial ports awaiting attack, and re-assuring the colonists by their presence; but would be looking for the enemy in his own harbours or on the high seas. This would be the best mode of defence her if it should for the best mode of defence; but if it should from any cause fail, and the enemy, giving the pur-suing squadron the slip, should make their ap-pearance off one of our harbours, the colonists should be prepared to prevent an entrance being

These gunboats would be comparatively use These gunboats would be comparatively use-less except in time of war, and it would be necessary to haul them up on a slip, floating them once a year or so, to practice the crew, and see that the engines were in good order. For the manning of the boats in a time of emergency, Captain Sex-mour would trust to volunteers, of whom he thinks these would be no lest if preparing the thinks there would be no lack, if proper induce ments were held out to men to enter.

He speaks favourably of the colonial war competent vessel when properly armed and maned. Her services hitherto, though very useful, have been of a purely pacific character. In order to make her legitimately a vessel of war, Captain SEYMOUR suggests that the officers should receive commissions under the seal of the colony; but Sir HENRY BARKLY intiof the colony; but Sir HENRY BARKLY intimates that he shall apply to the Imperial Gomanent recognition by the Admiralty, and get her placed in all respects on the same footing as the Indian navy.

'A similar recognition would be required for the officers of the gunboats, if it is decided to have them. Captain Sermour's proposals are to be submitted to the Defence Commissioners, and it will then remain, even if they arrays of

be submitted to the Defence Commissioners, and it will then remain, even if they approve of them, for the Government and Parliament to decide whether it will be expedient to make immediate provision for them. The projected land batteries will take two or three years to complete, and the expense of bringing out several gunboats may perhaps be distributed also over two or three years, and by having one or two out without delay, opportunity would be given for commencing the training of colonial crews.

Dr. DOUGLASS seconded.

Mr. JOHNSON thought the country at large industrial through the property of the second reading of this land title peclaration and to a change which had taken place in the Ministry too, which appeared to hape had as much as my thing cless to do with the form in which these measures were now presented—so different from the bill which his hon, and learned friend had formerly introduced, and which, as he very truly said, had not met with any very great deal of favour, and which he had subsequently with to bear upon this subject, and that he had low brought to bear upon this wild, had not met with any very great deal of favour, and which he had subsequently with the at indeed round, as it were, with the traditions of on when any measure of reform was to be understaken, mother country, when any change was found to be sary, perfusional interests and battle of minet were opposed to alterations, and almost precincide the pear of their being carried one. They were to sensels what measure were best adapted to the exigence community. As emineral susterity (Air, Cardwell add, that that colony would be a carboity which carry its love of instating English precedents as to adopt the difficulties of any or system in the older country. carry its love of initiating English precedents so he as to adopt the distinuises of any existing system in the older country. The hon, and hearned member had recognised and applied the principle of registration as regarded deeds.

Air. JOHNSO's had not so counted his application of the principle alluded to.

The ATONESY'-OSNERAL: Then he had admitted that the main principle of the bill was one which did consended the first of his judgment. Why, then, if that were the case, did he not openly affirm that principle, and consent to the second reading of the bill? It was a highly astisfactory circumstance that, in the Imperial Parliament, at the passing of Sir Hugh Calme's bill (which had been alluded to as mainly the basis of this measure) a great number of solicitors and laymen had expressed themselves very warmly in its favour. The Attorney General read an extract from a newspaper in support of this statement. He ist quite sure that the estimants of those gentlemen who were opposed to this bill were entirely distinterested, and such as should actuate all honourable members of the profession, whose opinions were worth any consideration. Difficulties, however, existed in the way of a ready transfer of landed property even here which it would be highly desirable to obviate. In this country it must be admitted that it was highly important that lead about a readily pass from hand to hand, be treased the agreat extent as if it were a chattel, and be made available for the payment of debta. The dolicitor-General, who had received revise and thanks on account of this bill, was alone entitled to any credit for the same; and the bill ought now to be read a second time, become, whatever might be asid, the referring of the bill to a select committee, before so read, did, it fact, determine its fate as measure. (The Attorney-General ten preceded to quote from some work, to show that in Ourberland (it England), where a great deal of land was found to work well.) The delay and innon venices which too often occurred might be ob reading of the bill.

Mr. BROADHURST had listened with great attention to what had falles from the honorable and learned member who spoke last, with whom he had disagreed at the outset. Having heard all that he had said, he still remained of the same opinion. He thought that hey was bound to deal with this matter colonly and deliberably, and that they ought not at present to allow the bill to be read for the second time. He hoped that the amendment would pass, and that the smeandarm would pass, and then that, whatever conclusion was arrived at, it might be a safe and a deliberate one.

Mr. BRACES would not buy here prepared to vois for

Mr. IBAACS would not bave been prepared to vote for the amendment, if he had thought that the effect of such an amendment would be equivalent to giving a negative to the principle of the bill. He could not see, however, that that was the case, and no person sequanted with parliamentary proceedings would be of that opinion. EWhat was asked for was 'simply that the bill should (with other bills on the name vurject) be referred for the consideration of the select committee which had already been appointed. To do this was not to negative the principle of the bill. He desied that there was not principle in this bill (arther than that it was desirable to facilitate the transfer of landed property. The Imperial Act referred to had been discovered to be so defective in the tense assession in which it had been passed, and requently since. Everything in this bill before them that have been been deal with in the solect committee. His hon, and issued great was a mere matter of detail, and could be best deal with in the solect committee. His hon, and issued great was doublies weekled to this bill be for the solect control of the solect mination.

Mr. JOHNSON briefly explained that his honorable and learned friend had altogether misunderstood him. His hon. friend said the committee were determined on the registration of deeds, but the contrary was the fact; some—and he for one—were opposed to registration site-gather.

The SFEAKEE magnets of that the hon, member for Paterson might be allowed to give an explanation of the Words compliated of.
After a few more remarks from both alles of the Horses of the Control of the Horses of the Horses

The SSIEARER ruled that the words were disorderly. He regarded it as offensive for any hon, member to designate another hon, member as the nominee of any person shatscever.

Mr. ARNOLD withdraw the words, and expressed regret that the hon member should have thought that he meant anything offensive beyond the ordinary bounds of parliamentary repartee, reminding the boung gentleman that an observation he himself had made was such as to call forth some observations from him. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. OXLEY assured the hon, member for the Paterson that he had not been actuated by the alightest personal feelings, but he objected to the words because he thought them an insult to the House through one of its members.

Mr. PLUNKETT said he should be glad if the hon, member would make the disclaimer which the hon, member for West Sydney said he understood him to make, in order that he might refrain from making any appeal to the Speaker. After a pause, he further observed that an oather disclaimer was made he should fieel it, his duty to move that the words taken down were disorderly.

Mr. LODER said that the hon, member for the Paterson had already expressed his desire to withdraw the words, and that it was expecting too much to ask him to withdraw them again.

Mr. ARNOLD said he should like to know what was the meaning of the words. If it were decided disorderly to speak of an hon, member as a "political opponent," he would not call the hon, member so again, although he might think so. (Laughter.) But if such very militerms were agreed apon, he trusted that he—who was accustomed to be spoken of in attonger language, which he was not in the habit of asying he treated with contempt, but which, nevertheless, he did treat with contempt—should be spoken of in mild terms. In answer to a remark from Mr. Plunkelt, in reference to the application of the words "political partisans" to the Chairman.

Mr. Aligically referred the hon, member to the inference.

In answer to a remark from Mr. Plunketh, in reference to the application of the words "political partisans" to the Chairman.

Mr. ARNOLID referred the hon, member to the inference. The Chairman could not deckle the point of order. (Hear, hear).

The SPEAKER again read the words to the House.

The SPEAKER again read the words read were not the words taken down and read to the House, nor were they anything like them. He was not before aware that any aliresison had been made in them.

Mr. ROBERTBON said he believed the words read wase the words and, but assuredly they were not the words taken down and read by the elerk.

Mr. PIDDINGTON auggested that the words should be handed to the clerk to see whether they were in his handwriting or not. He had nothing to do with the alteration of the words.

The words were handed to the clerk.

The SPEAKER said it appeared that the document was in the handwriting of the clerk.

Mr. ARNOLID: If any one said those were the words taken down by the clerk and read to the Assembly, he had been guilty of an unwith years in of the truth. The words now reported were contended for by the hon, resember for West Sydey. It might be that the ulcleman in the public service were so much accustomed to the dictation of the clerk of Gevernment that public service were so much accustomed to the dictation of the alteration was made; but he (Mr. A.) would submit to Sydney, 17th January, 1860.

To the Honorable W. Bland, Esq., M.L.C.; George Lord, Esq., M.L.A.; William Wright, Esq., J.P.; and the ether gentlemen signing the requisition.

Gentlemen,—I readily accede to your invitation to become a candidate for the representation of Canterbury in the present Parliament, and place myself unreservedly in your hands. Permit me, however, to express my regret that such necessity should have arisen by the retirement of a representative so efficient, well-tried, and liberal as Mr. Plood.

My pullified onlying.

atrict justice being observed towards all who nave equivable claims.

An amply endowed system of general education should be provided, and the Denominational system should be liberally supported, inasmuch as mon's consciences are not to be corrored.

The Upper House, as experience proves, should be elected.

Momineelam in any shape I hold to be unconstitutional. The British House of Lords in its origin was elective. The present magistracy and the Logislative Council show nonlineelam in a light so theroughly dishonest and disgraceful that no freesum or lover of his country can contemplate it otherwise than with losshooms diagnat.

bonest and disgraceful that no freeman or lover of his country can contemplate it otherwise than with losishsoms diagnat.

The Land is the great inheritance, the distinctive feature of our noble country, and will become the feature of our noble country, and will become the feature of our noble country, and will become the feature of our noble country, and will become the feature of our noble country, and will become the feature of our noble country, and this cannot be arrived at until it is opened up by reads and survey; an agricultural population is to be created and festered by every means, as the very seed of a country. The squatting interests settli to be profected, but individual interests must give way to general interests; yet conflection on takes place, nor should injustice be inflicted on these valuable producers, these working beas, the only people who reader any returns to the State for the use of the public inheritance.

Railways are indispensable to the development of the resources of the country, and we are not to be deterred from their construction by any senses.

The Gold interests appear accrealy sufficiently protected. The Tariff is a class legislation, and epen to improvement; it is, indeed, an unjust burthen imposed upon the labouring community. The principles of free trade are for all values and all times, and protectionists are conspirators against the common rights and interests of humanity.

Dependence is a diagrace to any free community. The times require the cultivation of the arts of war; a militia is indispensable; all achools should be trained to the use of freemas, &c.

Gentlemen, if honesty and independence, with spirit to maintain niers under all circumstances, and to punish whose in all powers, he necessary qualifications in your representative, with determination to devote his utmost ability to your and his country's services, then, gentlemen, I hope to be your elected representative, and not your nominated delegate.

WILLIAM SHERWIN.

TO THE ELECTORS OF CANTERBURY.—Gentlemen.—In common justice to myself and my supporters, I am most reluctantly compelled to contradict the assertions that have been industriously deroulated through the Gevernment offices and the public generally, that I have declined the election in favour of Dr. Sherrin, as I are ver authorised any one to make any such statement.

I am, Gentlemen, faithfully yours,

the Lachian district, about 150 MILES FROM DENILIQUIN.
The pasturage, consisting of salt bush and other salsoleccous plents, is of the very finest quality, and the country is watered by springs and watercourses.
Great natural facilities present themselves for erecting dams at a trifling cost, which, if costried out, would materally increase the capabilities of the run.
Apart of its value as a permanent station, it is particularly adapted for an overland depot for stock. It is only about 150 miles from Denliquin; is conveniently situate as regards the route, and the fattening nature of the country would secure forwarding the stock to market in good condition.

dictated by the hon member for West Sydney.

At the request of Mr. MURRIRS, the words were read again, puon which
Mr. JENELINS said that the words first taken down and read to the House were—"I will not appeal from a political oppearent to a political partisan; the Speaker shall decide." (Hear, hear.) When the words as amended were read, hawwer, the hon, member did not object.

Mr. ARMOLIS said be did not notice the alteration. He had sufficient confidence in the officers of the House to bolieve that, having heard the words, and being uninterested in party warfare, and taving taken them down carefully, they would refuse to submit to the dissention of any hon, member whatever. It was the dissention of any hon, member whatever. It was the though he (Melleman to have protected him in this matter. Although he (Melleman to have protected him in this matter. Although he (Melleman to have believe in the hon, member as a politician, be had hoped, until now, in his impartiality as chairman—be had hoped he would protect him, but he had forgottes to do that.

Mr. PIDDINGTEN said that so far as he receilected there was a politicien, be hed hoped, until new, in his impartiality as chairman—he had hoped he would protect him, but he had forgotice to do that.

Mr. PIDDINGTON said that so far as he recollected there was a great deal of disorder and noise when the words were taken Mr. PIDDINGTON said that so far as he recollected there was a great deal of disorder and noise when the words were taken consistence having been made.

Mr. PIDDINGTON said that so far as he recollected there was a great shad to disorder and the words as each to correct the supposed omission, and read the words as each to correct the supposed omission, and read the words as each to correct the supposed omission, and read the words as he was able he should be could to maintain order and uphold the rights of the commisse, and so long as he enjoyed the high position he at prevent held he should not be influenced by one side of the House or the other;—not even the unfounded instinuation of the hon, muchtr for Faterson should deter him foundoing that which he much to the should be the high the words that which he was necessary to the doubt he day to the words to the hone.

Mr. ARROLD: If do to be his duty, Cheers, Mr. PERNKETT desied that he claimed any authority to dictate to any one in the House, or that he was necusated by any feeling but that of respect to the chair, and no one who flitted to the other. Unless the how, member made that amends to the House to which it was entitled, he should press he motion. The hors, gentlems the own which the was now difficult to any what the words taken days are highly disorderly and offensive to the House as applied to the Chairman, of Committees.

Mr. ROBERTSON hoped that the remotion would be withreference to the words used.

Mr. JAZ thought it undesirable that this motion should be proceeded with unfel the hon, member for Paterson had explained with reference to the words used.

Mr. GORDON was of opinion that, according to "May," there was really no point of order before the House.

Mr. DALLEY said that the House ought tirst to decide whether the words had been used before they sailed upon the hon, member for Paterson to explain. The real question now was, whether any words at all had been taken down in compliance with the rules of the House. The only person capable of taking down the words was the clerk of the House, and the reason for this was obvious, since he would always be impartial, whilst either a Speaker er a Chairman of Committees might have been placed in his office as a reward for political partiannship. Now the words taken down by the clerk were not, by universal consent, the words uttered by the hon, member, whilst the words and before the House were not the words taken down by the clerk. He pointed out the danger of allowing words to be altered, emitted, or interpolated, since it would place an hou, number at the mercy of a political majority.

Mr. HAS tages in impressed upon the House hocessity for all the state of the language used.

Mr. HAST moved, as an amendment, that the House proceed to the next order of the day, as no good was to be gained by this discussion.

Mr. FORSTER said the rule for taking down words was that to the next order of the day, as no good was to be gained by this discussion.

Mr. FORSTER said the rule for taking down words was that the cierk was to take them from the hon, member who wished them to be taken down. As to the question before the House, if the hon, member for Paterson would make his explanation, possibly the whole matter might be settled; for if the hon, member would state distinctly that he did not intend the remark to apply to the Chairman of Committees, he (Mr. F.) would not vote for the motion before the House.

Mr. FLUNKETT quoted from "May," to show that the hon, member for Paterson ought to explain, and then withdraw from the House whilst his conduct was under discussion.

The STEAKER said that that was no doubt the correct rule in wuch caree, and, in order to expedite the business, he would enter the hon, member for the Faterson about offer such expects the hon, member for the Faterson should offer such expects a hort pause.

explanation as be might think proper and then withdraw.

After a short pause,

Mr. ARNOLD said that, although the bon, and learned member had a perfect right to dictain the alleged offensive expression selects, it was not right that he should be allowed to alter it in a surreptitious way. He (Mr. Arnold) did not know what rules of Parliament there were which prevented his alluding to any hon, member of the House as a political partians. Full even if he had used these words in reference to the hon. Chairman of the had used these words in reference to the hon. Chairman of the had used these words in reference to the hon. The had witnessed to night; in connected that if he had spoken of the hon. member as a political partian, he did not exceed the language to which he was entitled. Did they ever heavy either in this or in any other Parliament of so monatrous a proposal as to put a sort of hypothetical case—sort of feigned issue—and to say, that if one hon, member had applien of another hon, member in a certain words appeal case—sort of feigned issue. The decision to which the House was invited to come to was the words. The decision to which the House was invited to come to was the words. The decision to which the House for the had been guilty of nating language that was a p

this course had not been adopted in this cases, the House could take no notice of it.

Mr. PLUNKETT replied: He acknowledged that the hon, member for Camden had made a rather offensive speech; but the hon, member for Paterson, in reply, pertinaciously insisted on using the words complained of. He did not think the Chairman of Committees had soled hastily in calling the hon, member to crow, and the Speaker's ruling had proved that he was right in taking exception to the words used. He contended that the Chairman of Committees had been insulted by the hon, member, and unless the House took notice of it, it would lower ittelf in the eyes of the country.

Mr. HAT suggested that hose members should not force the House to a decision, but leave it to the Speaker to decide the question. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. FLUNKETT consented to take the course suggested by the hose member for Murray. He begged leave to withdraw the motion before the House.

The question that the motion be withdrawn was put and The Sergenst-et-Arms, hering been instructed to request the attendance of the bon, member for Peterson, Mr. Arnold entered and took his seat.
